

Junius Mensis Dronius¹

On June the 20th there will be a meeting of the Sophia University Drones Club,

- Naomi Berman² will introduce her latest focus of study,
- Hikaru Minami³ will introduce a new, dramatic performative poem,
- Justin⁴ will introduce us to some M&S⁵ sweets,
- Dominic Cheetham⁶ will introduce Naomi, Hikaru, and if we have time, will ask, 'can nonsense be serious?'⁷
- Richard Pinner⁸ will attempt to introduce a hitherto lacking gravity to our meetings by being solemn, stern and amusingly droll⁹.
- Life will go on regardless¹⁰.
- Time will tell.¹¹
- The Kraken will dream of sailing ships.¹²
- The truth will out.¹³
- And we will put that in our pipe, but not smoke it, because, well, yeuch.¹⁴

Room 6:405, Sophia University. Starting about 5:20-ish.

(If you have one, bring a friend!)

² Of the Naomi Berman institute of advanced Naomi.

³ Who is taking a break from Shakespeare to concoct alarmingly exciting work of her own.

⁴ Freshly back from Blighty.

⁵ Murder and Slaughter

⁶ Best ignored.

⁷ Seriously! Can the absurd or the impenetrable be considered a part of nonsense?

⁸ Did you realise that if you swapped the P for a D and shortened his first name he'd be Rich Dinner. Amazing thing, language. (This is exactly what I mean about a lack of gravity in the Drones. I mean, who writes this stuff anyway!)

⁹ Maybe.

¹⁰ Except in those unfortunate instances when it doesn't.

¹¹ Now there is a stupid saying. Surely we will tell time, not the other way around.

¹² And marshmallows.

¹³ There you have it ladies and gentlemen – the truth is not straight after all.

¹⁴ Millennium hand and shrimp!
